HOUSE AGENTS TO GET KOREAN LOBBY DOCUMENTS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 7 (UPI)—Under pressure from the Speaker of the House, Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., the Justice Department tentatively agreed today to let House investigators study secret intelligence documents relating to South Korean lobbying in Congress.

The material could show whether United States intelligence agencies reported in the early 1970's that the Korean Government planned to give Congressmen cash and gifts as part of an effort to win continued American military and economic aid.

The documents were sought by a House international relations subcommittee that is trying to determine whether officials of the Nixon and Ford Administrations were aware of illegal Korean lobbying activities on Capitol Hill and, if so, what was done about them.

The subcommittee has scheduled hearings on the issue late this month. After the Justice Department rejected the subcommittee's initial request for the intelligence documents, Representative Donald M. Fraser, Democrat of Minnesota, the panel's chairman, urged Mr. O'Neill to seek them from Attorney General Griffin B. Bell.

Mr. O'Neill disclosed the new agreement after meeting privately with Mr. Bell, Mr. Fraser, the House Republican leader, John J. Rhodes, and Representative Clement J. Zablocki, Democrat of Wisconsin, the head of the International Relations Committee.
